Managing Healthy Eating Habits

By Paula Swaford, RN

After years of feeding two rapidly growing sons, never having to worry about what to do with the left-overs, because there were none, I am now feeding myself. Maintaining proper nutrition is very important when cooking for one or pr six. One of the biggest problems when preparing meals for one or two is getting enough of the basic food groups included in your daily diet. It is not appetizing to eat the same food on Thursday that you prepared too much ef on Monday, I still haven't figured out how to make a small pot of homemade soup or chili; but I'm learning. One suggestion I was given when cooking large amounts of food, is to freeze half of it for a quick meal later. For some reason, I never remember to do that. Here are some ideas to get you started on making easy and nutritious meals for one or two people: Cook once and eat twice, or even three times. Cook a small roast; eat one Cortion now and freeze additional portions to mix with vegetables for quick soups, stew, or chili. Buy frozen vegetables in one-pound bags. Cook what you need for single of double servings or mix several kinds of pasta on hand. Many cook quickly, Pasta makes an littractive side dish, or it can be used as a base for stew or topped with a low-fat sauce. Make single servings or cook extra to add to soups or topped with a low-fat sauce make single servings or cook extra to add to soups or cosseroles. Mix with vegetables and a low-fat dressing for pasta salad. Pasta is also much more economical than meat and provides us with an excelpint source of carbohydrates. It is also a fair source of protein, potassium, phosphorus, calcium, and very little fat.

Either invite them over to share a meal with you or to take something you've prepared with them. It makes a nice change of pace to taste something prepared by hands other than your own. Satellites help researchers find new habitats for endangered wildlife

By James Hellegard

Miversity of Florida News

With species extinction on the rise and biological diversity on the decline, researchers are using satellite imagery in a search for possible mew habitats for endangered wildlife.

Researchers at the University of Florida are collecting data on vertebrate and vegetation distribution throughout the state. After producing digital images, researchers use geographic information systems technology to overlay land management patterns on biological patterns.

Florida is one of 33 states taking part in the National Biological Services Gap Analysis Program (GAP) to help guide large-scale conservation. With the conservation of the conservati

Scot Smith, a UF civil engineering professor, is one of those trying to develop a "smooth, seamless measic" of the state's vegetation. He works with satellite images of 185-square-kilo-meter areas. That large swath is broken down into smaller pixels measuring 30 meters on selve side. Son by row, researchers have been into smaller pixels measuring 30 meters on each side. Row by row, researchers have been working from the southern tip of the state, in the only tropical environment in the United States, northward to more temperate climes. The individual scenes then are put together into me seamless map for the entire state. So far, they've made it as far north as Orlando. 'Although we did it in sections, 'Smith said, it has a look as if it was done at one point in time over the entire state.'

Once Smith and the others finish mapping an area, researchers with expertise in wildlife ecology, botany and zoology "tie that information with the ways wildlife actually behave to see if it actually works," he said.

Gered Wildlife

Because of clouds and Florida's unique weather, producing satellite images is a little more difficult than it would be in more arid places.

"One of the problems with satellite imagery is you have lots of atmospheric interference that requires you to do a lot of pre-processing of the imagery to make it clean," Smith said.

One of the project's goals is to identify potential habitat for species. Laura Brandt, a doctoral student in wildlife ecology and conservation, said the information will be very useful for regional planning. All counties must make comprehensive plans in which they consider nature resources and future development. She sees it

She sees it as a tool to look at the 'lip jeiture sigatead of looking at things in a piecemeal fashian.' Leonard Pearlatine, project leader and a UF professor of wildlife ecology and conservation, said the project will affect state-level resource management. 'You're able to put everything into context and to have a common unit that covers the entire breadth of the state,' said Pearlatine, co-principal investigator on the project with Smith.

"It will also give you information on what species could potentially be in different areas," she said, "So by combining that information you can look at where there are areas that are high in species diversity and richness, and areas that might have endangered and threatened species. These are areas that you might want to protee, so you can base your development around those and fit that into the whole scheme of things." The key to survival of species in Florida, Frandt Siid, is to look at species from "a land-scape perspective, which the GAP analysis provides. "We really can't do any of the development as it has occurred in the past and expect to be able to maintain the integrity of the ecosystems because everything's so interconnected," she said. "And now that we have these tools where we can look at the big picture, we need to take advantage of that."

Juvenile justice commitment capacity increases by 127 percent

Florida Department of Juvenile Justice Secretary Calvin Ross testified in December, 1996 that the commitment capacity of the Florida's Juvenile Justice System has increased by 127 percent, since the new department became operational in 1994.

"Delinquency cases received by the Department of Juvenile Justice reached over 171,000 in 1995-96. That's a nine percent increase in referrals since the department began," Ross aid. "At the same time the systems capacity for dealing with these youth was rebuilding from a low point of 2,841 beds and slots in 1993-94 to our current capacity of 471 beds/801cs."

UF researcher helps establish new views on human origins

By Steve Orlando University of Florida News

University of Florida News
A University of Florida anthropologist is part of an international research team whose new findings could change the way human evolution theory is taught in some classrooms.
The team that includes UF anthropology professor Susan Anton used a relatively new dat-ing technique to show that the remains of a modern human ancestor are thousands -- and perhaps hundreds of thousands -- of years modern human ancestor are thousands - and perhaps hundreds of thousands - of years younger than previously thought. The new evidence may alter opinions that have been held for more than 60 years. "As modern-human-origins debates go, this is the debate of the '90s," Anton said.

The project, to be featured in the January issue of the journal Science, deals with the age of the youngest remains of Homo erectus, the predecessor of Homo sapiens, or modern humans. The Homo erectus remains were discovered by Dutch researchers in 1931. along the Solo River on Java, Indonesia.

Initial estimates placed the remains at between 100,000 and 400,000 years old. "Among other things, they used morphological dating, which means they looked at the (remains) and said, "They must be old," Anton said.

But Anton and her colleagues, led by Carl C. Swisher, a giochronologist at the Berkeley Geochronology Center in Berkeley, California, used two modern dating techniques, one of which electron spin resonance (ESR) - is consistent of the art. Because the remains used two modern dating techniques, one of which electron spin resonance (ESR). Is considered thate-of-the-art. Because the remains are the available for samples to be taken from them, Anton's team dated water buffalo teeth dug from the same area from which the Homo erectus remains came.

The new age: 27,000 to 53,000 years old.
That bolsters one prevailing hypothesis of modern human origins, known as the Out of Africa model, but contradicts the other: Multiregionalism.

Africa model, but contrastes the originalism.
Multiregionalisms say Neanderthals evolved into modern himans in Europe, with the latest Neanderthal remains being about 30,000 years old. About the same time, they say, Homo erectus evolved into modern humans in Asia and Southeast Asia. Those who subscribe to the Out of Africa theory believe Homo sapiens arose in Africa and then spread throughout the world, replacing Neanderthals and Homo erectus with Ittle or no gene flow.

The new, younger age of the latest Indonesian Homo erectus remains indicates they coexisted with modern humans in Southeast Asia, Anton said. That would mean current versions of the Multiregional theory no longer are chronologically possible.

"If we're right. then at that time period you actually have three hominids - Homo erectus, Homo sapiens and Neanderthals walking the earth at the same time," Anton said. By today's measure, with only modern humans on the scene, that may seem like an odd notion. In the big-picture scheme of things, it may not be so strange after all. little or no gene flow.

In the big-picture scheme of things, it may not be so strange after all.

"It actually turns out we're probably the exception rather than the rule," said Anton. Anton doesn't expect her team's new information to be accepted by everyone. While anthroplogists are about evenly divided between Out-of-Africa followers and Multiregionalists, she the former generally enjoy more promi-

"Out-of-Africa folks will pick it up sooner," she said.

Indeed, the team's work likely will spark new debate between the two schools of thought, said Philip Rightmire, an anthropology professor at the State University of New York at Binghamton, N.Y., who is familiar with the team's work and thinks highly of it.

Rightmire said he doesn't expect the findings to show up in textbooks for at least a couple years, but he believes they eventually will enjoy widespread acceptance.

years, but he believes they eventually will enjoy widespread acceptance.

I think they've done a good job, and most people will end up accepting the ESR dates, he said. If what they say is true, the Multiregional people will have to do some fast talking. When you think of jobs in agriculture, the image of trac-tor drivers and field managers comes to mind. But a farm comes to mind. But a farm cannot operate without accountants, secretaries, and attorneys. And furthermore, the agricultural industry relies on research scientists, computer technicians, and salespeople. Barnett 1996 earnings rise 12 percent to record $2.86 per share

Barnett Banks, Inc. reported this week that they have record 1996 earnings of $564.5 million, or $2.86 per fully diluted share, a 12 percent increase in earnings per share. These results included a $24.5 million charge in the third quarter to cover a special assessment to recapitalize the assessment to recapitanze the Savings Association Insulance Fund (SAIF). The company earned $533.3 million, or $2.56 per share, in 1995. Barnett, which has an effice on South Main Street, Ielle

Glade, improved profitability, achieved significant revenue growth, reduced expenses on a percentage of revenues and maintained solid credit quality, according to Charles E. Rie, chairman and chief executive officer. Barnett earned a record $138.3 million, or $.67 per

Barnett earned a record 1.42 percent return on assets and a 17.44 percent return on share holders' equity, excluding the SAIF charge. "Barnett enjoyed another record year in 1996," said Mr. Rice. "The use of information and technology is enhancing our ability to meet more of our customers' financial needs more effectively. Our product line continues to expand and we are offering more ways for customers to access us any-where, anytime. Barnett's cul-ture is changing from a tradi-tional bank to a financial ser-vices organization. We have never been more enthusiastic about our future."

Revenues rose 8 percent from 1995. Net interest income from 1995. Net interest income increased 6 percent, as strateic asset/liability management initiatives resulted in an increase in the net yield on earning assets to 5.24 percent form 4.88 percent in 1995. Non-interest income was up 13 percent, as consumer finance revenue rose sharply and brokerage income also improved. Excluding the $24.5 million SAIF charge, non-interest expense was up 5 percent. Barnett reduced its overhead ratio (expenses as a percentage of revenues) to 59 percent from 61 percent a year earlier. Net charge-offs rose 27 percent to $543.3 million, primarily due to increases in credit

While 1996 net charge-offs were .51 percent of loans, fourth quarter net charge-offs declined to .38 percent of loans. As part of a strategic alliance established with Household Credit Services, Inc. in October, Barnett sold $776 million of non-core credit card outstandings to Household.

This transaction resulted in fourth quarter credit card charge-offs being significantly reduced from prior periods.

The provision for loan losses

The provision for loan losses in 1996 was $154.6 million. The reserve for loan losses stood at $477 million on stood at $477 million on December 31, covering 250 percent of non-performing loans and representing 1.58 persent of total loans.

Barnett completed a 2-for-1 stock split on Sept. 6, and all previous per-share amounts have been restated to reflect the split, said Mr. Rice.

With more than 340 billion in assets, Barnett Banks, Inc. is the leading-financial institution in Plorida and ranked in the top 25 in the United States.

I think a lot of fish were out of the mood to spawn after this last cold front. There are still a lot of fish in pre-spawn areas. PHYSICIAN SPOTLIGHT

New Relief for Painful Heels John S. Levin, D.P.M.

Sharp pain, aching or stiffness on the bottom of the heel are very common ailments. The pain is offen worse upon awakening, but may subside after a few minutes. This discomfort can also be present following periods of extended rest and resumed activity.

Theel pain originates deep within the foot, directly on the fieel bone or within a ligament (the plantar fascia) on the bottom of the foot. Several layers of fatty tissue surround the heel bone, softening/absorbing impact and protecting bones and muscles. Below this fatty layer, the plantar fascia supports the arch of the foot. Pain results when tissues become irritated or inflamed, or when small spurs grow on the heel bone.

Other causes of heel pain include goul, valous income. Diagnosis of the exact cause is critical for fractures of the heel and on rare occasions, bone tumors. Diagnosis of the exact cause is critical for alleviation.

Teatment of heel spurs may include anti-inflammatory medications, physical therapy, arch supports and surgical release of the plantar fascia. Taking aspirin or ibuprofen as directed, until the symptoms subside, can help to reduce pain and inflammation. Avoid physical activities and wear a good supportive shoe. Never walk barefoot as long as the heel is painful. If these maneuvers fail to resolve your pain, see a foot and ankle specialist.

A new procedure called "endoscopic Plantar Fasciotomy" allows lengthening of the plantar fascia and is performed through two small incisions on either side of the heel. Using the aid of the endoscope, the plantar fascia is lengthened, without disrupting surrounding soft tissues. More traditional procedures require 4-6 weeks of immobilization, usually with crutches, before you can return to activity. With the endoscopic procedure, patient's are able to walk the same day and are back in shoes within 3-5 days. If your heel pain has not been relieved with conservative management, Endoscopic Plantar Fasciotomy may be your answer for relief.

Dr. Levin is a physician with Oghopedic Center of Palm Beach County and specializes in Foot and Ankle Surgery. He is board certified by the American Academy of Podiatric Surgery and is a Fellow of the American College of Foot and Ankle Surgery. Glades AG Service, Inc.

Glades AG Service is known for dependable, safe aerial spraying services throughout the area. Their licensed aviators are trained to understand this business, assuring farmers that their land will be properly seeded, fertilized and sprayed for unwanted weeks and pests. These professionals strive to provide unexcelled service in all phases of aerial agriculture.

Glades AG Service offers farmers an alternative to ground seeding, spraying and fertilizing. Air spray service saves time, is less damaging to crops and less expensive in the long run than ground spraying. Aerial spraying allows the EPA approved chemicals to be distributed evenly, totally covering the entire plant and creating less waste. Farmers can save money on equipment, time and chemicals by contracting with these professionals. Services are available on a one time or regular contract basis at very reasonable rates.

The pilots are licensed and insured and have extensive aerial map knowledge. They are the only applicators in the Glades that have the GPS swath marking system. Their airplanes are maintained and kept in top condition so that their many customers throughout the entire area can rely on dependable and accurate service.

Gilberto says they are able to keep their prices present location at 200 S.W. First Street, Belle low and inventory high because they have a controlling interest in a Miami-based jewelry manufacturer. This allows them access to watchmakers, designers and a stone setter. They also have a high demand for speciality jewelry, made to order."

> ."We invite new customers to come and see what we have to offer. And, for some of our customers who haven't been by in a while, we welcome them to come and see the new things we have to offer," said Robert.
